So, you forgot your iPhone’s password. It happens to the best of us. And you can guess all you want, but after too many attempts the system begins to lock you out. At first, it’s in short bursts, but after too many wrong guesses, your iPhone is locked for good. It might not be pretty, but here’s how to get yourself back in.Why a password-locked iPhone is so seriousUnfortunately, if you forget the password to your iPhone, there’s no getting back in as it stands. Apple makes it very clear that your password is the only key iOS will accept to unlock your iPhone; the company won’t unlock your iPhone without it (if they would, the FBI would be very interested as well). Your iPhone isn’t a lost cause though. You can still get back in, but at a cost: If you forget the password to your iPhone, the only course of action is to restore the device back to factory settings. That means wiping all data on the iPhone, effectively making it feel like a brand new device.Warning, lecture incoming: This is why backing up your iPhone (and all other devices in your life) is so important. Anything that isn’t backed up to an external source, whether that’s iCloud or a hard drive, will be totally lost in this process. Photos, messages, anything not backed up, blipped out of existence. G/O Media may get a commissionFortunately though, it’s easier than ever these days to keep your stuff backed up. Sure, there’s the ease of iCloud backups, but that’s not all; much of your data is likely tied to your iCloud or other connected accounts. When you sign into those accounts on your restored iPhone, that data comes with it. Of course, if you’re at this point where you’re completely locked out, there’s no changing your backup status; whatever is backed up is what can be saved. How to restore your iPhone with a computerIn order to restore your iPhone, you’ll need to put it into recovery mode, starting by shutting down your iPhone. This method differs depending on your specific iPhone model, so you can find yours in the descriptions below, and follow those directions to shut it down: iPhone X or later, iPhone SE (2nd gen), iPhone 8 and 8 Plus: Hold down both the Side button and Volume down button until you see the power off slider.iPhone 7 and 7 Plus: Hold down the Side button until you see the power off slider.iPhone SE (1st gen) and iPhone 6S and earlier: Hold down Side (or Top) button until you see the power off slider.Now that your iPhone is turned off, you’re going to need to do the following at the same time you plug your iPhone into your computer:iPhone X or later, iPhone SE (2nd gen), iPhone 8 and 8 Plus: Hold down the Side button. iPhone 7 and 7 Plus: Hold down the volume down button. iPhone SE (1st gen) and iPhone 6S and earlier: Hold down the Home button. Keeping holding down your iPhone’s applicable button until you see the recovery mode image appear on your device’s display, then let go. Find your iPhone in Finder (macOS Catalina and newer) or iTunes. Click “Restore” when the option to Restore or Update appears. Now it’s in your computer’s hands. Just wait for the process to complete, and you’ll find your iPhone fresh and new. Restore your iPhone using Find MyIf you have Find My enabled for your iPhone, you can remotely erase it using from the Find My website. Just head to icloud.com/find, then locate your iPhone. Click “Erase,” then click “Erase” on the pop-up. You might need your Apple ID email and password Speaking of Find My, that’s another issue; if your iPhone is connected to Find My, you’ll need to enter your Apple ID email and password when setting up the phone again. That’s because Apple places an Activation Lock on devices connected to Find My. It’s a good security measure; if someone steals your iPhone and uses the above steps to restore it, they won’t be able to set it up without those credentials. [Business Insider] For whatever reason, you’ve had to reset your Android device to factory defaults. You don’t want to go through the process of re-installing and configuring all of those apps manually, so what do you do? Fortunately, the Android developers have made it pretty easy to restore that device from a backup. This, of course, does come with a caveat. As of now, Google only retains a single backup of your device, which means you’re only able to restore to that point in time (most likely the last time you used the device). If Google made it possible for users to download their backups, one could download a backup at a point in time when the device was exactly how you wanted it, and when something goes wrong you could delete the most recent backup, upload the working backup, and restore from the newly uploaded backup. Unfortunately, that’s not an option. Are you listening, Google? This means you must work from within the limited constraints of the Android backup and restore system. But how do you do this? Let me show you. Checking your backup Before you restore that device to factory settings, I highly recommend you head over to your Google Drive account and click on the Backups entry in the left navigation (Figure A). Figure A If you don’t see your device listed, that means there’s no backup to restore from. If that’s the case, your device isn’t backing up to the cloud. To change that, open up Settings on your Android device and go to Google | Backup. If the Backup to Google Drive slider is off, tap it to turn it on (Figure B). Figure B Once you’ve turned the backup on, you should eventually see it appear in the Backup listing on your Google Drive account. Restoring from a backup During the restore to factory defaults process, you will be asked if you want to either Copy your data or set it up as new. When prompted, tap the Copy your data entry. In the next window, tap the A backup from the cloud entry. You will then be prompted to sign into your Google account. Once you’ve successfully authenticated with your account, you must agree to the Terms of Service, by tapping I AGREE. In the next screen, you can choose which device to restore from (Figure C). Figure C Here’s a tip–if you have more than one Android device backed up, you don’t have to select the backup from the one you are working with. How is this possible? What you’re really doing is restoring app and certain device settings such as app and Wi-Fi configurations, so it’s okay to restore a backup from a different device. I’ve yet to experience an issue with this. Remember, the restore process isn’t installing a device-specific ROM. This is very handy if you have one particular device that has just the right collection of apps installed. You can then select which apps you want to restore, or just restore them all (Figure D). Figure D Once you’ve taken care of that, complete the process and the backup restore will complete. You will be able to start using your device, as the app installation continues–the amount of time this takes will depend upon how many apps that were contained in the backup. When the restoration completes, all your apps will be ready to use and many of them already configured from the backup. Not perfect, but close It would be nice if Google allowed users a bit more management capabilities for backups such as downloading a specific snapshot. Although this process isn’t perfect, it’s pretty close. Restoring an Android device from a backup couldn’t be any easier. So the next time something goes wrong with your device, fear not–restoring is but a few taps away. Open Settings. Tap your name and choose iCloud > iCloud Backup. Confirm the toggle next to iCloud Backup is on/green.Tap Back Up Now. Return to the main Settings screen. Tap General > Reset > Reset All Content and Settings.Decline another backup and select Erase Now. The phone erases and prompts the initial startup process. Tap Restore from iCloud Backup. This article explains how to restore an iPhone without iTunes by using iCloud. This information applies to iPhones with iOS 10.3 or later. The way iPhone users have backed up and restored their devices has been by connecting their phone to iTunes and saving their data to the computer's hard drive. That method works fine if you have iTunes, but you should learn to back up and restore your iPhone without iTunes. Open your iPhone's settings. Tap your name at the top of the screen. Tap iCloud. Tap iCloud Backup. If the toggle next to iCloud Backup on the next screen isn't on, tap it to set it to on/green. Tap Back Up Now. Your iPhone will create a backup of its data and store it in your iCloud account. Several reasons exist why you'd want to reset your iPhone, but most of them are because of a software issue restarting fails to resolve. To reset your phone to factory settings, return to the main Settings screen and tap General. Scroll down to the bottom of the screen and tap Reset. Tap Reset All Content and Settings. This command will delete everything from your iPhone and return it to the condition it was in when you first bought it. A window will appear asking if you want to update your iCloud backup before you erase your phone. Since you just made a backup, tap Erase Now. Your iPhone will erase itself and restart, prompting the initial setup process. Sign in to your Apple ID when you receive the prompt to do so. iOS will ask how you want to set up your phone. When you reach the Apps & Data screen, tap Restore from iCloud Backup. Apple If iCloud has several backups stored, it will show you a list of the available options. Each backup will include the date and time you created it. Use this information to choose the most recent file (i.e., the one you made earlier). Your iPhone will copy the data from that backup. Depending on how much your phone needs to download, you may not have full access to your apps and information right away. That said, you can still use your phone while the process continues in the background. The number of ways to restore an iPhone has expanded thanks to the rise of Apple's cloud storage service, iCloud. This platform makes it possible to access not only backup data, but functions like photos, calendars, and contacts on any device that's logged in to the same Apple ID. Migration to iCloud has made physical storage in the Apple ecosystem less important. And with other functions like backups and music libraries heading for the cloud, it's increasingly unnecessary to connect your phone to iTunes. Another benefit of cloud storage is it makes it possible to access the information you're keeping online wherever you are. If your phone has an issue you can't solve by restarting, and you're away from your computer, iCloud will help you solve the problem immediately instead of forcing you to wait until you can connect to iTunes again. However, the more immediate reason is iTunes won't be around forever. As of macOS 10.15 (codenamed Catalina), the app no longer exists in Apple's operating system. Once you upgrade to the new operating system, syncing and backing up to iTunes won't be an option. Thanks for letting us know! Get the Latest Tech News Delivered Every Day Subscribe Tell us why!
